We dedicate this show to Olivier Cueto, a cherished member of the company who passed away in March 2020. He imagined, created and performed this show with us until the very end.

THE SHOW

In the darkness of the early morning, the Natchav circus arrives to town. Its caravan of trailers and lorries take their place in the central square. The sledge gang begins its concert of steady blows, pounding the first stakes into the ground; the sound of the immense canvas whips through the air as the tent poles are hoisted to the sky.

Suddenly, out of concern for security, the authorities order the circus to leave, forcing them onto a vacant lot in the outskirts of town. Following a scuffle, one of the acrobats is arrested and jailed for contempt and rebellion. So, the circus troupe, along with the other prisoners, decide to carry out a spectacular escape, one full of ingenuity and twists and turns...

Through an extraordinary play of shadow and light, Natchav (go away, run away in Rromani) recounts a story in which, on the margins of society, two fundamentally opposed worlds mingle — that of the circus and of the prison.

It is a story of intrigue that unfolds through a dynamic scenography. With no spoken dialogue, the visuals and music generated and performed live guide the narration, creating an original and provocative composition between reality and fantasy.

ARTISTIC STATEMENT

Natchav tackles the notion of freedom, an idea largely diminished due to overuse, so much so as to be left devoid of meaning by a world that controls, counts and submits.

With its roots in the preservation of a lifestyle of nomadism, independence, community, movement and play, the circus invites audiences on a journey into the extraordinary, the wonderful... Time is measured in the moment. There is even an expression in circus jargon: "the point of suspension", which describes the moment when an acrobat is free from the binds of laws, including that of gravity. In contrast, the primary purpose of a prison is the deprivation of liberty: it is there to punish and confine, with all that this implies in terms of permanent constraints, lack of space, solitude, inactivity and monotony. In addition to the lack of space, there is an excess of time.

The current difficulties facing most circuses reveal a fundamental discord between their way of life and the societies they live amongst: the progressive privatisation of public spaces prevents these communities from finding their place, the growing number of safety regulations generates changes and costs that they may not be able to ensure... Moreover, borders are increasingly being conceived as tools for controlling the movement of people, whereas travel and nomadism look past identities and states.

The freedom that these circuses defend and which we want to explore with Natchav is a sentient and infectious idea; it is a point of departure, a perpetual movement inextricable to anyone who wants to feel alive.

A SCENOGRAPHY IN MOVEMENT

Following the French-style puppet stand of Pekee-Nuee-Nuee and the large-scale production of Les Somnambules, the company Les ombres portées continues its exploration of the world of shadow theatre with its third creation.

In an attempt to break with the linear nature of image-based narratives, this creation plays with a scenography aimed at freeing the audience from the traditional frontal character of shadow theatre.

On stage, in full view of the audience, the performers illuminate and manipulate the different sets and characters of the narration. Installed on mobile supports, the prison, cells, marquee and others are brought and arranged on stage as the story unfolds — their shadows projected in large on a panoramic screen at the back of the stage.

The spectator's eyes are drawn from one direction to the other by the projection of the shadows, the theatrical play of the puppeteers and the musicians on the stage.

These interwoven narratives participate in a multi-layered theatrical and scenic composition, allowing the audience to witness the making of the story as it happens.

SHADOW AND LIGHT

Both of the worlds encountered in Natchav lend themselves particularly well to the techniques of shadow theatre.

The world of the prison is a setting of opacity, secrecy and silence. It is never revealed what really happens within the cells. The truth is hidden behind a maze of walls and bars. The shadows reflect this dark, obscure and hidden dimension. What is shown of the prison is revealed through various angles and vantages. Cracks, prison bars, peepholes and cameras act as filters, providing an intimate glimpse inside.

On the other hand, in the dreamlike world of the circus, everything is visible: from the arrival of the caravans and the rigging of the tent to the smallest details of the acts themselves under the spotlight. The physical manipulation of the sets and characters in full view of the audience captures this raw exposure and provokes a feeling of tension in the audience comparable to that experienced during a real-life circus performance.

A CINEMATOGRAPHIC MONTAGE

The treatment of the plot is borrowed in part from the narrative techniques of noir novels and film narratives, mixing suspense with an array of twists and turns.

Like a camera, light serves as a guide for the narration, offering spectators a myriad of perspectives. Panning shots, zooms and cuts rhyme with the narration and create a dynamic reading of the story like a film shot live using multiple cameras.

LIVE MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT

The music, played on stage live and in full view of the audience by two multi-instrumentalists, features original compositions, musical improvisation and sound effects. Partly inspired by traditional circus themes, the musical score expands on the genre by adding a cinematographic dimension. As with live film concerts, the music actively participates in the narration and highlights or creates tension and surprises.

The work of a lutherie was incorporated to design singular instruments and sound effects, which act as acoustic counterparts to the visual devices.

STAGE PLAN

For the staging of the show, a large cyclorama is placed at the back of the stage. It is framed by borders at the bottom, on the sides and at the top.

Several large-scale mobile sets are used to represent the different scenes of the narration. These sets and the puppets are manipulated live by 4 puppeteers and their shadows are projected onto the large screen at the back of the stage. As the show progresses, the sets are brought to and from the wings to the stage.

Two musicians, playing live side by side, are positioned downstage right.

Leg drapes are required, with either Italian or German front curtain openings depending on the theatre.

STAGE REQUIREMENTS

The audience is to be seated directly in front of the stage.

Total darkness is required for the room.

The stage must be raised or at ground level.

The stage must be covered in black vinyl dance flooring.

THE COMPANY

Les ombres portées was created in 2009 by a group of individuals coming from different worlds (music, scenography, construction, drawing, photography, etc.) who sought to bring their talents together and work collectively. For any given project, up to a dozen members, artists and technicians may be involved.

The company revisits the art of shadow theatre with an original and innovative poetical take offered in the form of shows for all ages. Accompanied by live music and without any spoken dialogue, each project is an opportunity to develop a singular scenographic proposal and musical aesthetic that is always in line with the message being conveyed.

Approaching its work from a collective and collaborative stance, the company invests a considerable amount of time into creating each production. It also offers numerous shadow theatre workshops for all ages.

Pekee-nuee-nuee (2011) and Les Somnambules (2015) have been performed over 150 times in France and around the world (Germany, Netherlands, Switzerland, South Korea, etc.), and continue to tour today. Natchav (2019) is the company's third collective creation.

Since September 2020, the company has been an associated artist with the theatre La Faiencerie de Creil, being part of its artist roster for the last three seasons. It has also been registered with the Île-de-France Regional Department of Cultural Affairs since 2020.
